Jules and Verne in the Bottom of the Sea

"Dive into the underwater world!"

"First book of the collection"

"Learn more about the underwater life with this fun characters"

Julio and his parrot Verne receive a letter from Captain Nemo with an important mission: to locate a lost ship at the bottom of the sea! In this adventure you will learn everything there is to know about the secrets that hide the bottom of the sea: how submarines work, what were the first diver's suits that existed, what fauna inhabits the oceans... However, Captain Nemo does not act normally, and everything seems to get complicated as they get closer to their destination. Will Julio and Verne finish the mission and return home?

Beni & Bela Mindfulness

"A nice story for kids and a great guide for parents with techniques to deal with stress and emotions"

"Written by Helen Grain, a mindfulness expert"

"Find the QRs with audios for each meditation!"

A nice family of rabbits shares the practice of mindfulness with readers, children, their parents or their teachers. This book incorporates techniques and tools for children so they can get used to another way to face their day to day, being more present in what happens in their bodies, instead of getting carried away unnecessarily by what emerges in their minds. This way they will prevent stress sensations from going further and alleviating episodes of anxiety or anguish. Much emphasis is placed on the awareness of the body, on the enjoyment of small things, in learning to eat with the five senses, in observing their breathing or knowing how to calm down. A jewel, exquisitely illustrated.

Un día flotaban unas nubecillas blancas y esponjosas en un cielo tan tan azul, que Mamá decía que era celeste.

La familia al completo había salido de pícnic, con su cesto lleno de verduras crujientes y una manta a cuadros.

Se habían tumbado debajo de un gran árbol y jugaban a ver pasar las nubes.

3. LAS NEURONAS

El cerebro recibe comunicaciones (perdidos colores, oídos al teléfono, nos quemamos con agua caliente...) desde todos los rincones del cuerpo. Estas comunicaciones se mueven a través de una enorme red de células cerebrales llamadas neuronas. Estas forman los nervios.

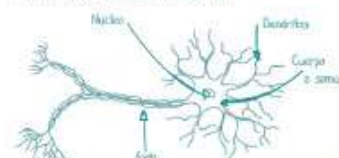

A través de estos nervios se transportan las señales eléctricas. Cada minuto, nuestro cerebro recibe millones de estas señales eléctricas en forma de mensajes y debe seleccionarlos y decodificarlos.

3.1. ¿CÓMO ES UNA NEURONA?

Las neuronas son células muy especiales, tienen tamaños y formas muy distintas y son las únicas que poseen propiedades que sirven para transmitir información a una velocidad altísima.

En todas ellas se distinguen tres partes:

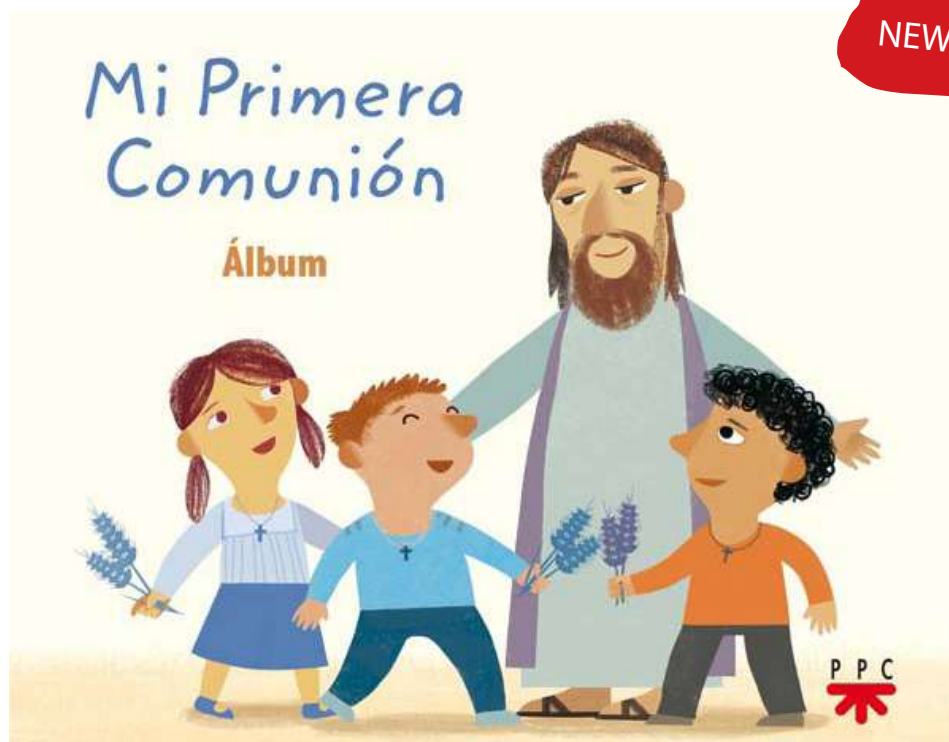

- El cuerpo o soma, es un orgánulo lleno de flujo, con un núcleo que controla su funcionamiento. Todo lo que necesita la neurona se produce aquí.
- Las dendritas son filamentos ramificados cortos que pueden del soma al axón. Reciben información de otras neuronas y la mandan al soma de la propia neurona.
- El axón es el filamento más largo y fino, junto con muchos otros, los principales hilos nerviosos de nuestro cuerpo. A veces puede llegar a medir 1 m. Su función es conducir las señales nerviosas desde el soma hasta las dendritas de otra neurona. El axón está recubierto de mielina, que lo protege y acelera el tránsito de los impulsos nerviosos.

Las neuronas están enlazadas entre ellas por capas constituyendo cadenas neuronales. Estas enlases son muy importantes. Pormenorizadamente y a cualquier edad, el cerebro crea nuevas cadenas neuronales.
